I LIKE YOU A LATTÉ: CAFÉ RICHE AND THE EGYPTIAN REVOLUTION, 1919

Freedom! Revolution! Coffee? Take a trip with us to the Cafe Riche, a hub of intellectual, political, and revolutionary action in 1910s Cairo, Egypt. As World War I ends, Egypt reels from military exploitation at the hands of the British and broken promises from the Allies, and unrest grows in the countryside and city alike. The country finds itself at a crossroads—will Britain retain control over Egypt's political and economic functions, or will the people shake off British rule and establish an entirely new government? As the revolutionaries of Cafe Riche, delegates will aim to do the latter. On the weekend's menu is a drip-brewed mug of political machinations with a pump of Arabic literature, a medium-roasted carafe of state building, and a triple shot of a great time.
